The abdominal wall defect: the problem and an algorithm. Closure of abdominal wall defects remains one of the most frustrating problems of reconstructive surgery. Over the last 50 years there has been a steady improvement in the understanding of wound healing and the development of the concept of staged closure in reconstructive surgery. Early repair has been shown to be beneficial in many ways, e.g., freedom from postsurgical complications, faster skin graft take, decreased risk of fistula formation, and reduced incidence of dehiscence. Only available in the day, they get their eggy delicacy from three-hourly hens caged in small, dark, damp cellars and fed fresh feed. The Cattlewotters/Creedlow found out about Wootten's 10 years ago from a fellow chef of French descent (who came up with the concept while working in an Italian cafe) when he decided to try and source a banoffee pie from a shop in the West End that had been out of stock for weeks. He couldn't find it anywhere, not even in the little butchers on the Covent Garden piazza, and it was obviously in short supply at the West End shops he tried either.
