The purpose of this study was to compare computerized tomography (CT) scans of the temporomandibular joints of patients with disc displacement with those of patients with degenerative joint disease. CT scans of the temporomandibular joints of 22 patients were examined: 11 patients with disc displacement and 11 patients with degenerative joint disease. Each scan consisted of a 12-s scan and a 5-min scan. The 12-s scans were analyzed for the presence or absence of each of the following diagnostic criteria: anterior and/or posterior disc displacement, condyle flattening, posterior disc displacement, anteriorly displaced disk, and erosion of the condyle. Each criterion was assigned a value of 0, 1, or 2. In the 5-min scan, each criterion was assigned the same value of 0 or 1. One radiologist determined if the 5-min scan was consistent with the 12-s scan. The kappa statistic was used to measure the agreement of the two scans. The degree of agreement was measured on a scale from -1.0 to +1.0. A chi-square test for independence was used to compare the distribution of the number of criteria found for each group. CT scans of the temporomandibular joints of patients with disc displacement with reduction showed the highest level of agreement in comparison with scans of patients with disc displacement without reduction and scans of patients with degenerative joint disease.Predicting the prognosis of patients with lymph 77a5ca646e
