Illinois Symphony Orchestra (1983) The Illinois Symphony Orchestra was a short-lived symphony orchestra based in Chicago, Illinois. Its first concert was in May 1983, and featured guest artists, including James Levine, Anne-Sophie Mutter, and Leon Fleisher. It was named in honor of the Illinois Chamber Orchestra, founded in 1939 and led by Robert Craft, a local radio personality. On April 15, 1985, an anonymous reader of the Daily Herald sent a letter to The Chicago Symphony Orchestra, asking to be put on its mailing list. He or she promised a large donation to the Chicago Symphony Orchestra and said the source of the gift would be revealed to the press. The anonymous letter was mailed to the Chicago Symphony Orchestra's lawyer. After a bit of correspondence with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra lawyer, the anonymous donor confessed to the Chicago Daily Herald that he or she was George Regas, an employee of the Illinois Symphony Orchestra. The Chicago Symphony Orchestra considered the anonymous donor's donation to be an illegal contribution and canceled the anonymous donor's pledge of $1,000,000 to the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. The Illinois Symphony Orchestra was notified of the cancellation and promptly folded. The Illinois Symphony Orchestra at that time had a $50,000 annual budget.
