She could hardly spare a quarter for smokes. But she would gladly trundle him to the very gates of Hell--if he were not already there. CHAPTER 10. He awoke feeling that he had not eaten anything during the night. He had not once broken into the scanty rations the Sister had placed for him. A hunger grew upon him, and his body seemed so strange to him that he could not even recognise it in the old state. Alone with his thoughts he lies down. He tries to think of the past, but his mind takes him up to where he was in Carmel. Once more he shudders with horror, and he begins to feel there can be no happiness for him. His future is one of horror, of cruelty--
