Over a quarter of a century ago, Smith and Blow discovered that ribonuclease (RNase) could be classified on the basis of a common property, rather than by phylogenetic criteria alone. They organized this concept, known as the metal protein superfamily (MPS), on the basis of chemistry, and provided no clue about how this concept might have relevance to the biological function of RNase. Despite the apparent lack of biologic connection, the MPS has developed into one of the most intriguing areas of biological research. This review examines how the concept of MPS has been applied in a variety of domains, including structure/function, evolutionary relationships, phylogenetic classification, and biocatalytic properties. Although the chemical mechanisms of the RNases are now well established, the focus is here on the biological consequences of the presence of a metal ion in the RNase active site. The general principles of function, such as cleavage at U, G, or A, in which the function is enhanced or modified by the presence of a metal ion, can be used for the development of more efficient ribonucleases. The development of highly enantioselective nucleases will be discussed as a useful example of how this can be done.  $\{ *out++ = ' '; \} if (parsed == 0)$

Profile of 3 patients with large granular lymphocyte syndrome and recurrent bacterial infections. Large granular lymphocyte (LGL) syndrome is a heterogeneous disorder in which a marked depletion of T lymphocytes of both CD4 and CD8 subsets is observed. We describe 3 patients with LGL syndrome associated with B cell lymphocytosis. Three patients with clinical features of recurrent bacterial infections presented with lymphadenopathy and mediastinal adenopathy. LGLs were detected in all 3 patients by flow cytometry. All patients had persistent proteinuria and 3 had significant renal dysfunction. Remissions of lymphocytosis and hypogammaglobulinemia occurred with corticosteroids. In 1 patient, a normal lymphocyte population resulted in recurrent bacterial infections despite the continuation of a corticosteroid regimen. In another patient, a lymphocyte profile that included a high proportion of activated B lymphocytes and residual normal T cells resulted in recurring bacterial infections while on therapy. LGLs were detected by flow cytometry and culture in all cases, but were undetectable by staining with a panel of monoclonal antibodies in 1 patient. These results confirm that a subset of LGLs are still present despite remission of lymphocytosis. These observations also suggest that LGLs may play a role in the pathogenesis of proteinuria in LGL syndrome. We speculate that both the proportion of normal lymphocytes and the activation of the B cell compartment are important variables in the clinical course of LGL syndrome. Falk-Link Falk-
