Suppression of the diabetes-related circadian dysrhythm in rats by transplantation of fetal mesenchymal stem cells. Persistent circadian dysfunction is a risk factor for the development of diabetes and associated cardiovascular diseases. We investigated whether the transplantation of fetal mesenchymal stem cells (fMSC) can modulate circadian regulation in the presence of streptozotocin (STZ)-induced diabetes. Circadian activities and gene expression were analyzed in male SD rats with STZ-induced diabetes transplanted with either fMSCs (diabetes + fMSC group) or phosphate-buffered saline (control group). Compared to control animals, diabetes induced a strong elevation in plasma glucose levels. However, the diabetes + fMSC group had normal plasma glucose levels. On the basis of locomotor activity measurements, the most prominent circadian dysrhythms among the diabetes group were a bimodal pattern in the 24 h light/dark cycle and a loss of periodicity in 12 h light/12 h dark cycles. In the diabetes group, the expression levels of the core clock genes mBmal1, Clock and Per2 were strongly downregulated in the liver and kidney. fMSC transplants completely restored the normal circadian expression pattern of these genes in both the liver and kidney. In addition, transplantation of fMSCs reversed the bimodal pattern of locomotor activity in the diabetes group, and it improved the regular circadian activity pattern in the control group. We conclude that fMSC transplantation is a promising approach to induce a normal circadian profile in diabetes-associated circadian dysrhythm. If You Look At The Riffs... ...There's A Shape In Them That Says "Cringe With Pickin' Hands" Changeling – Cringe With Pickin' Hands (2008) That's just a band name, right? Well yeah, they obviously use it. It's the name of their newest album. But, if you just took a look at the riffs, there's a shape in them, right? They kind of look like fingers if you look at them at a certain angle.

And that's pretty much all
