■ Worlds of Epic Fantasy and Myth

The world of Tarnished is divided into four planes: The Plane of Elves, the Plane of Humans, the Plane of Beasts, and the Plane of Sacrosa. The Plane of Elves and the Plane of Humans have been matched, and the Plane of Elves and the Plane of Beasts have become more distant. The Plane of Sacrosa has religious structures and knowledge that has not yet been recorded in the world. The Plane of Elves is full of culture and joy, and the Plane of Humans' scientific prowess is striking. The Planes of Elf, Beast, Sacrosan become blurburs named after a star, which are all guardians keeping the balance in the very flat world. The various races of Tarnished are divided among the four planes, and they are also sworn protectors of the balance. This book describes the history of the four planes, as well as the existence of Sacrosan. The Plane of Elves lies in the flat world, and the Plane of Humans lies on the other side of the flat world, and the plane is defended by the guardian elves. The Plane of Beasts has an abundance of flying creatures, and because of them, there are races known as the Griffins that fly in their own territory.

If you can help us, then contact at sit@fasttrack-cracks.com Friday, June 16, 2006 As the Oregon Legislature starts to contemplate a new two-year budget, "Chris Lehman, the Oregon state treasurer, has said [it] would probably look at reining in the growth of the state's employee pension systems, which now account for roughly a third of the budget." According to Lehman, "Oregon has a total of about $34 billion in bond debt, and about $26 billion of that is owed to the Public Employees Retirement System. A one-percentage point cut in benefits [is roughly] $200 million, so there is room to make a dent in one of the fastest-growing parts of the budget." Cultural and economic determinants of food energy intake in a developing country. The structure of food-energy intake in a developing country was studied by 24-hour recall of food intake and dual energy X-ray absorptiometry, a method which allows a direct measurement of body fat. Two rural populations differing in ethnic origin and degree of development were investigated: Black South Africans (n = 248) and Zulus (n = 20). The Zulus were in a productive stage of their economic development, whereas the Black South Africans were in a prosperous stage. In each group, the nutritional quality of the food was relatively good with mean values in the bottom half of the international range, but the mean energy intake was very high, 1.9 times the international recommended value for women and 2.3 times that for men. The two populations also differed in their food intake with regard to cultural values: The Zulus consumed more bread and less sugar than the Black South Africans. Whereas the mean intake of bread in the Zulus was 40.6% of the total energy intake, in the Black South Africans it was only 26.9%, (p
