Maxis is continuing its commitment to introducing meaningful updates to its core technologies, enabling the next generation of players to challenge and impress in FIFA 22. With an overhaul of the very foundation of the game, FIFA 22 offers players the best-feeling gameplay in the series to date. Key HyperMotion technology Developed at EA Toronto, the core technology of HyperMotion in FIFA 22 embodies the essence of "speed" and plays a key role in delivering the most responsive and authentic experience in the FIFA franchise. This latest iteration of technology has been developed to introduce physics-based simulation and control that completely changes the way players deal with AI opponents. Speed and Physics Players will now experience physics-based collisions and control around the pitch, which leads to better decisions, improved ball control and controlled movements while playing. On-pitch behaviours have been enhanced with a new AI logic based on new player data. AI opponent players will tackle, dribble and pass to their teammates more intelligently, a major step in the AI updates for FIFA 22. Revision of animations FIFA 22 introduces animation that better reflects what's possible in the game - combinations of jumps, physical impacts and the ability to move in relation to teammates and opponents. Players will be able to make more controlled movements with the ball in and around the box. Tactics Enhanced ball control and more intense battles, which leads to better decisions and control from players on the pitch. New communication features in the gameplay and AI, a more realistic player AI, including the ability to understand when and why decisions are taken, dynamic coaching and tactics that can be updated on the fly, and an all-new infrastructure that allows for more sophisticated game planning are also offered. A new pitch Named the "FIFA Pitch 2," the new pitch is a revamped version of the 25-year-old FIFA Pitch, which has been improved in terms of flexibility, mobility and responsiveness, while also designed for better player immersion. This results in better gameplay and more comfortable movement around the pitch. Tinder CEO Sean Rad on why the dating app wants to get bigger Tinder CEO Sean Rad is in many ways a huge fan of small business. At his All Hands meeting last week, which was held in his fabled Tribeca loft, he excitedly waxed philosophical on how he went about learning to love the idea of small business and

A football-management video game, FIFA is the flagship product of Electronic Arts and the most popular football video game in the world. Owned by Electronic Arts, FIFA games are distributed to all territories in the world. Developed by EA Canada, FIFA was first released in September 1994, an exclusive game for the Sega Genesis. EA Canada was also responsible for the most recent FIFA games - FIFA 11 (2010) and FIFA 12 (2012). Every year, EA's head office releases a new FIFA game, usually featuring in-depth changes to the gameplay and including new team and player modes, stadiums, and gameplay modes. Also, each year, FIFA players vote for their favorite teams and players in the World Club Championship. In 2002, FIFA was the number one-selling game for a full year, until FIFA 11 (2010) was released. Each player in FIFA takes control of one team and manages the players by gathering information and making decisions on a matchday. The player can perform a variety of actions on the pitch, such as attacking, defending, receiving the ball, taking the ball, passing, shooting, and dribbling. The player and his team try to play to win, and the match ends as soon as one of the team scores a goal or the time runs out. Matchday The football simulation in FIFA is one of the biggest in the genre. The matchday begins when the match whistle blows. The players will then be free to roam around the pitch during the warm-up period. The player can also choose to select a new formation or to modify the formation already in use. The coach can also make line-up and tactical changes during the matchday. The player then chooses to attack or defend. Attackers will try to score, while defenders will try to defend their goal. The attacker receives the ball and dribbles or passes the ball to the teammate and, finally, is able to kick the ball into the goal. The player can perform a variety of actions on the pitch, such as attacking, defending, receiving the ball, taking the ball, passing, shooting, and dribbling. Players who are taken out of the match can be replaced by another player or can play the game again at a later stage. Matchday includes a number of adjustments, including a view of the technical area and pitch markings. Technical
