In 'Micro Miners' your main character is a miner with a slingshot, just like the old classic's Slingshot Pete. In this game however you work your way up to being a mining boss! The player energy system in this game keeps you on your toes throughout the game in a way that was never done before. In this game the player has two health bars, player energy and mining energy! Your player energy is displayed with your emotes, your mining energy is displayed with coloured orbs. The orb colour will indicate how many mining orbs the player needs to collect to upgrade to the next level. Being able to change your mining orbs is quite useful for helping you not overheat your mining energy. Overheating your mining energy can lead to frustrating moments when you do get the orb energy level to upgrade you, especially if you are mining alone. It is a good idea to get well into the game and chat to other players to share mining strategies with them, their mining strategies will be invaluable to you when you get towards the end of the game. The name of this game is based on a micro-miner, the smallest kind of mining machine, that is used to extract metal ores from subterranean regions. These micro-miners are based on the idea of having just enough power to get the job done. The pets in 'Micro Miners' work like that. When you first start your journey in 'Micro Miners' you are just like that, you have just enough miner power to begin your journey to being a mining boss. You need to complete a set number of mining levels in order to unlock a pet! In 'Micro Miners' the primary currency used in the game is called credits, in other words you earn credits by mining or purchasing them from other players. Credits can be used on your pets, to upgrade your mining levels or to purchase player upgrades. Credits can also be used to purchase in game boosts such as special mining upgrades or bigger slingshots. Credits can be earned by a few different ways, by mining ores and by purchasing them in the store for real money or in-game credits. Credits can also be earned by completing special challenges, as well as by sharing your mining upgrades and posts about your mining experience on social media platforms. In 'Micro Miners' you will need to equip a certain amount of mining energy before you begin your mining session. Each level you mine will be indicated with a small mining icon and coloured mining orbs. The amount of mining to Go Or something like that. The maker movement wants to make a robot that looks like a human, talks like a human, and feels like a human. A humanoid robot with a human face and a human body. A “personalizable” robot. Maybe the only thing missing is a pair of magic six-shooter cuff links with a little picture of Woody Woodpecker on them. Well, okay, a pair of six-shooter cuff links with a little picture of a robot on them might be unusual, but you get the idea. While the very concept of the Finnish-made K-3 and k-Plus robots is only a few years old, the maker movement, with its open source hardware and open source software development, has seen dramatic advances in its last six years. And now, with an estimated 150 robots built and sold worldwide, the time seems right to show you what a personalizable robot looks and feels like, and what that new world of open source robotics is really all about. The Fikes version: Industry Edition The idea that hobbyists and seasoned robotics hobbyists can reach into their garage right now and build a functional robot is nothing less than mind-blowing. You don't need to be a NASA engineer to build a robot, you just need a 3D printer, software and a robot body, as well as some pre-printed and pre-cut parts. The open source software development tools, the open source hardware, the "collaborative website", the ton of documentation and tutorials, et cetera, are free. The only real costs are the parts, which you can get locally at most hobby stores and online ordering sites, or they can be built for you in China (such as the K-Plus). If you want to build an additional robot — or expand the capabilities of a robot you already have — you just need to modify the software, add a different robot skin (or body), and reprint the parts, repipe the robot, et cetera. It's easy, it's free and it's fun. I had a chance to talk to the folks behind the robot movement at the Maker Faire (see this article for an example of what I saw at the Maker Faire) in Long Beach, California about a year and half ago. They were there to show off the ease of use of their robotics kits; the pervas
