BBC News The most watched BBC program in the UK is BBC News. It aired on TV from April 7, 1964 to June 30, 2001, on BBC One on Thursdays at 07:00 GMT/UTC, and can now be seen on iPlayer. Presenter David Dimbleby still presents the show today. News The word news came from the Old English nipes, meaning "what is new." The term was borrowed into Middle English in the sense of "any new or noteworthy event" (as of current affairs). In the 14th century the word took on a general meaning, "gossip, rumour, report"; it is used in the phrase "latest news". The sense of "information on a subject" is from 1580s. Nowness is from 1610s (either a sense of relating to the present, or of having recently happened). News is often distinguished from the general concept of "information" in the sense of present or new, a process that began in the 1970s. The fact of being new becomes important in the 18th century (as in "new information") and in the 20th century. Specifically, a newscast is an announcement of a story that is about to be reported, usually in the evening or overnight. The News The News (foaled 11 April 2005) is an Irish Thoroughbred racehorse and broodmare sired by U S Navy Blue, who was in turn the British Derby winner Nijinsky II. She was descended from the French-bred mare Croisiere (Damajal won four of eight races including the Prix du Jockey Club). Her dam, Salsa de Oro won four times in France and was twice a Chevelless-Hills. Robots A robot is a mechanical device resembling a human in appearance and often behavior. Robots are used in industry, military, entertainment, and research.

The term robot entered the English language in 1921. The word robot initially meant "a single movable mechanical arm", but this meaning has been eclipsed by the generic meaning. Other meanings are derived from "rob" (i.e. a thief), "robber" (a robber of goods or money), or German rob (to steal). Latin roborum is a passive participle of the verb reddere, meaning to strip or remove (a bandage). The term then was applied to any slave
