The FDA protects the public health by assuring the safety, efficacy, and security of human and veterinary drugs, biologics, and medical devices for public use, and by promoting the development and use of new drugs, devices, and vaccines to treat the full range of human medical conditions. The agency also helps to prevent and reduce the spread of HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases through immunization programs. The agency does not itself test or evaluate products; however, in collaboration with other departments, it does make safety tests and reviews records of existing tests on products and evaluates information submitted by interested parties. The FDA is an equal opportunity employer. Minorities, women, and individuals with disabilities are encouraged to apply The highly effective anti-cancer and anti-inflammatory effects of beta-carotene and other carotenoids when taken from natural foods, has been known for over two decades. Treatment of non-cancerous skin disorders and skin cancer have also been observed with beta-carotene and other carotenoids such as retinoic acid, which is the active form of vitamin A.Q: Is nodejs good for static webpages? After reading this article I have serious doubt about nodejs. Are there any good use cases for node.js on static web pages? I am talking about just serving static web pages with regular http request or any other way. A:

So I have these three files, header.h, main.cppmain.c, and function.c I've added the header.h file's contents to main.c and built the project. The project builds, and I can see the header.h file contains the contents of function.c. But when I try to call the function defined in function.c from main.c, the compiler gives me this error: main.c:17: undefined reference to `CreateNearestNeighbour' collect2.exe: error: ld returned 1 exit status I'm assuming this is because the function that I'm calling isn't in the same file as the main.c file. Question is, how do I resolve this? And is it possible to have header.h contain the contents of function.c, and call
