to the type of implantable cardiac devices referred to as "accelerators" which control cardiac pacing rates. Implants of the above type (sometimes referred to as "pacemaker-cardioverter-defibrillators") are well known. In such devices, the control circuit usually includes a microprocessor which is utilized in such tasks as to program or fine tune the operation of the implanted device to optimize efficiency of operation and to reduce power consumption. Heretofore, such a microprocessor has been essentially a standalone device, which was not utilized for other purposes. It would be desirable to provide a useful control circuit for the implanted device which not only serves to program the implanted device for its intended function, but also is useful for any one or more of a multiplicity of functions desired by the patient or physician. By way of example, such a microprocessor-controlled implanted control circuit can also be employed for monitoring the presence of a physician or other health care person and/or for controlling other pacemaker-like functions which could be performed by the implanted control circuit such as provision of tachycardia or fibrillation alerts or alarms, reporting heart rate intervals, providing summary information, and permitting other telemetry.

Q: Add custom response in HttpHeaders (ZF2) in our code we have a response like that: `$this->getResponse()->getHeaders()->addHeaderLine('Cache-Control', 'no-cache');` the question is how we can add our own custom headers to the response? I tried to use the `addHeaderLine` method, but the only name I can use is "Cache-Control". I need to set my custom header as below: public function __construct(Request $request) { $response = $request->getResponse(); $headers = $response->getHeaders(); $headers->addHeaderLine('X-Custom-Message', 'custom header'); $response->setBody($this->view->render(...)); }

but unfortunately it doesn't work.
