But in mongodb document looks so different from collections and databases. Please explain difference between document, collections and database in MongoDB. A: A document is an instance of a MongoDB collection. A collection in turn is a subdocument in a collection. For example, if we have a collection named users and add a document to it (i.e., $push), we end up with a collection called users in the database itself. So technically, your collection can have subcollections (i.e., documents) of it. A MongoDB database itself is equivalent to a MySQL database. And a MongoDB database has multiple collections, which themselves contain multiple documents. The difference would be that a MongoDB database can have multiple databases. Basically, we should look at a MongoDB database as a single table with multiple columns. By columns, I mean collections, which in turn are subdocuments of the collection. So to put it simply, a MongoDB database consists of multiple collections, which may have multiple documents each. The relationship between hepatocyte function and endothelial function: potential role of G-CSF and heme oxygenase-1. Endothelial cell dysfunction is an important contributor to the development of chronic liver diseases. Heme oxygenase-1 (HO-1), and granulocyte-colony stimulating factor (G-CSF), which are involved in the regulation of heme metabolism, and inflammatory cytokines, have been shown to play a role in the induction of HO-1 in a variety of cell types including hepatocytes. In this study, the potential effects of HO-1 induction and the G-CSF receptor signaling pathway in hepatocytes on endothelial function were investigated. The HO-1 inducer, hemin, was used to induce HO-1 expression in hepatocytes in vitro. The data demonstrated that the induction of 595f342e71
