Conclusion ===== We have shown that bioinformatics methods for searching databases can uncover previously undescribed gene families. It is therefore of great importance that sophisticated computer programs be developed to keep up to date with evolutionary changes in the genome of invertebrate species to enable accurate prediction of gene function.

Methods ===== Insect Species ----- The *B. mori*genome was downloaded from the SilkDB database on January 23, 2005. Searching for Non-coding RNA Gene Families ----- Putative non-coding RNAs were predicted using the program RNAz \[@B56\]. The program predicts the location and structure of RNAs by searching for conserved RNA structure in the genome with a hidden Markov model, as implemented in RNAz. Searching for Prion Associated Protein Gene Families ----- The four plant Prion-like proteins were used in a BLASTP search of the *B. mori*genome, with a cut off E value of  $10^{-15}$ . Conclusions ===== We have 1cdb36666d
