Windows .-year general law in favor of private parties to determine... the right to quiet possession of property.” (quoting Hillcrest Community Ass’n v. City of San Diego, 35 Cal. 4th 796, 805 (2004)). We have noted “[t]he California courts often... have said that the right to quiet possession has been held to extend only for such time as is reasonably necessary.” C.A. v. State of Cal. ex rel. A.E., 120 Cal. App. 4th 679, 692 (2004) (internal citation omitted). In a prescriptive claim, therefore, the right to possession cannot be extended beyond the time necessary to vindicate the nature of the prescriptive right. Otherwise, the defense of necessity 4 would swallow the rule. Cf. Blubaugh v. United States, Nos. 09-3804 & 09-3815, 2012 WL 3194633, at *1-2 (10th Cir. Aug. 14, 2012) (acknowledging that “[t]he concept of necessity is different from a claim that the claimant has an urgent and compelling need for immediate possession” and that “[t]he defense of necessity, however, can never extend
