Â· It is a Tense Moment We have waited so very long, for the winter to come to an end. We have waited so very long, but now that it has passed, we have been treated to an extraordinarily mild spell. On Saturday morning the sun was out, and the temperature was low enough to feel like spring. We were going out into it. After the rain, the sun was like a warm gift. As I walked to work, I kept thinking how much I am looking forward to the sun without needing to wear a hat. This was my life when I was growing up. It was a reminder of why I love living in Canada. I am grateful to live in such a great place to be where it is becoming warmer. It is simply wonderful. I am grateful to enjoy what feels like an easy way of living, where I don't have to wear a hat or a coat even when I am outside. It's a reminder of how lucky I am to live here. When I look at the old photos, I think of how we used to wait all year for the first snow. It is almost eerie to think we might never experience that here again. Even when you think things are bad, when things are bad, we can all remember happier days. Stunting and post-mortem liver injury in hogs raised under highly variable housing systems. An experimental and observational trial was conducted to evaluate the influence of housing on the ability of pigs to tolerate feed restriction. The trial used seven replicate pens of five Large White male pigs, with one pen assigned to an ad libitum feeding condition and each of the remaining six pens assigned to one of three levels of feed
