What's new:

Slime!!! Hi, I'm Embr. When I was a kid I played in the rock and roll clubs in Scotland's Fife Co' and loved it. I suppose some of it came from the legends of my birth town of Dunfermline R and B Jimmy (Jimmy the Sonic and his Juniors) and Mindy Martin-Harrison and the Honeydrippers, Jimmy, Innes and my Grandad, Willie Martin, who was a professional bass player. I got into rhythm'n rock when I was a teenager and suddenly realised you didn't have to be a The Clash or John Lennon to be a punk. I remember the first rock group I saw was the Small Faces and Little Stevie Wonder was the best rhythm'n' blues singer. I was 12 and his version of "ABC" was the first Jimmy Page guitar lick that made me really want to buy a guitar. After leaving Fife Co' and starting school in Elgin, I listened to everything - doo-wop, blues, rock and roll, whatever was out. But my first real love was still rockabilly. Looking back now, I was what is now called a Southern rockabilly artist. I played skins and 15s played banjo and joined in on most of the lead vocals. But I didn't think it would amount to anything. Fast forward to 20 years later - I'm over 50 now, still live in Scotland and started playing gigs again, in different pubs as my four tracks really never caught on. I sang 'AC/DC songs at my gigs, because I love them and I knew they were a known group, and they became my favourite fanatical group of all time. It never ceased to amaze me how many people I would meet who just happened to know them.

The original Guns N' Roses were practically a household name in Scotland by that time, and the creation of the song "Paradise City" had just lost that huge number of GN'R albums to me. I found the song I heard one time on Neil Young's "Tonight's the Night" album and found it was called "Paradise City" and I totally had to have it. It has been on 45's, cassettes and CD's all over Scotland, but, when I went down the shop and looked, it wasn't in. I had a cassette of Guns N' Roses albums, none of which told me where to find "Par
