I got a job as the lead artist for Roblox in early 2011. At this time we had just over 100,000 users and 100 employees. When I joined the team we had a backlog of games and features over 400. My first task was to determine the best way to tackle the backlog. In addition to adding new games and new features to the existing games, I set out to build a mobile app for the platform. In addition to this, I set out to develop the first music app for Roblox. I quickly understood what the biggest issue was going to be, we didn't have enough developers to build the games. This led me to the central question, can I build a game using content and services that doesn't require a developer? The answer was absolutely. I started tinkering with the idea of building my own cloud-based gaming framework that would allow people to build games using their webcam. The first game I made was called "Sleepy Hollow". I wanted to allow users to live-stream themselves as characters while playing. I took a $100 loan from my parents and put my savings in to buy a white plastic 3D printer. I found out that the printer was absolutely terrible and threw it out. That led me to building my own printer using a laser cutter and CNC machine. Several weeks later I returned with an entirely reworked version of Sleepy Hollow. This new version allowed me to add custom avatars and avatars that are generated using the facial recognition features of the Kinect. The next game to release was "Beacon". Beacon brought the idea of custom avatars to an entirely different level. Beacon allows users to create custom avatars and use them in the games they create. Beacon came along with a new feature called PlayStyle. PlayStyle is a way to modify games using block-based graphical editors. PlayStyle Playstyle was an entirely new way of trying to teach users how to program games and the way that they worked. I found out that the best way to teach users how to program games is to build content that the users can play. This allows the users to set the rules of the game, but in a way that promotes sharing. Using my understanding of PlayStyles I wanted to teach users how to build their own games. There's a lot of videos out there that teach users how to create a game engine in C++, but it'

An international survey of the health status of women. This study was conducted to determine the status of the health of women in the industrialized world and to compare that status with the general male health status. The International Survey of Health and Disability (ISHD), comprising 10 questions in 3 domains of the World Health Organization Disability Assessment Schedule (WHODAS), was mailed to 38,834 men and women aged 16-84 years. One response (8 women, 1 man) was excluded because a language problem prevented a good response. The data were analyzed in the following age groups: 16-24, 25-34, 35-44, 45-54, 55-64, and over 65. About 28-32% of the women reported having at least one long-term disability. Overall, women were significantly more often disabled (p
